Humane Society money swiped

Businesses asked to look out for bills marked with pet names

By Meaghan Downs
News staff

Talk of the Town restaurant co-owner Adam Shrout is upset that someone stole the first two dollars of profit his Broadway Avenue restaurant ever made.

But he's more upset, actually "disgusted" he said, that the same people who broke into his restaurant last Thursday night also took money set aside for the Anderson Humane Society.

"It doesn't hurt me, but at the same time it hurts the Humane Society from getting what they had," Shrout said Monday afternoon. "It's disgusting ... if someone needed food or money, we could have helped someone out. I had an iPad laying out, but they didn't touch that."

For more than a year, the restaurant had been hosting a fundraiser known as the "dollar wall," a place in the restaurant where patrons can choose to donate dollar bills to the Humane Society and display their donation, marked with their pet's name, near the cash register.

John Zimmerman fully intended to eat the three roosters he found for free online.

His daughter had other ideas. "They were headed for the Crock-Pot," Zimmerman said last Friday afternoon from his yard on Dawson Ferry Road, which is now home to hundreds of chickens, ducks and even a pair of domesticated turkeys.

"But Leah fell in love them, so here we are."

Leah is Zimmerman's 9-year-old daughter, an enterprising young lady who has taken falling in love with a few roosters into a full-blown chicken-raising enterprise that now includes more than 100 chicks she plans to sell for much more than chicken feed.

"I just love them," Leah said, taking a break from scurrying from the chicken house to the duck pen and back over to see her turkeys.

"None of these are going into the Crock-Pot."

Leah plans to sell the chicks to purchase a new iPad to replace one she said was broken not long

Schools might increase focus on evolution, climate change

Superintendent says changes up to state board of education

New national standards for science outline big changes in integrating engineering and technology into the science curriculum, as well as a stronger emphasis on biological evolution and global climate change.

The final draft of guidelines known as Next Generation Science Standards were released last Tuesday in a 95-page guide to performance expectations for students from kindergarten to 12th grade.

According to a press release from the Kentucky Department of Education, the Next Generation Science Standards have been in development for the past two years and were compiled with the collaboration of scientists, educators and engineers from 26 states including Kentucky.

Core concepts such as engineering and technology are to be integrated in science courses to "reflect the interconnected nature of the science as it is practiced and experienced" and to prepare Kentucky students to be more college and career-

Judge dismisses lawsuit against city attorney

Lawyer: Suit filed to 'embarrass' Myles

By Ben Carlson
News staff

A lawsuit filed against part-time City of Lawrenceburg attorney Robert W. Myles was dismissed Tuesday in Anderson Circuit Court, but is expected to be re-filed in Shelby Circuit Court.

The lawsuit claimed that a security agreement created in 2004 by Myles for a Shelby County couple was inadequate for the couple to recoup more than $100,000 from the sale of livestock and other items on a three-year balloon payment.

The case was dismissed Tuesday by Judge Charles Hickman following a motion by Myles' attorney, C. Gilmore Dutton III of Shelbyville.

Hickman ruled that because the transaction occurred in Shelby County and Myles lives in Shelby County, Anderson County is not the proper venue for the case.

Following the dismissal, the attorney representing the Shelby County couple, David Nutgrass, said he now intends to

Clerk: Legion permission not needed for splash park

Hume says working with county to put facility in community park would be 'inappropriate'

By Meaghan Downs

The city does not need permission from the American Legion to construct a future splash park in the city park, according to City Clerk Robbie Hume.

The city has the authority to "make improvements" according to the city's lease agreement with the Legion for use of the city park land, Hume said, and has made improvements such as the recreational walking trail and disc golf course.

"The lease allows for improvements," Hume said, adding that the splash park would be considered an improvement. "The city can on leased land, absolutely they can."

"We have utilization of the park, that's why we lease it so we have the

Some praise, some rip proposed splash park

Anderson News readers waived no time after last week's paper hit the newsstands weighing in on Facebook about the proposed splash park.

"I think that it is ridiculous to spend that kind of money on something that only a limited number of citizens would use," said Lori L. Hill of Lawrenceburg.

"Think it is a great idea and we could have all kinds of things surrounding it," said Laura Whiston Johnson Hanks.

ability to do things there."

The city held a public hearing April 8 regarding a $75,000 Land and Water Conservation grant application for a "wet play area" featuring aquatic sprayers and spouts for Anderson County children and their families to use.

The splash park would be constructed roughly where the volleyball courts are now, Hume said.

If awarded the grant this fall, the city would need to match at least 50 percent of the project, which is projected to cost about $150,000-160,000.

City's proposed splash park sparks social media conversation

By Meaghan Downs
News staff

News of a city grant application for a future splash park ignited criticism and praise from Anderson County residents over the last week on social media.

More than 40 Anderson News readers posted comments on The Anderson News' Facebook page as of Tuesday morning about the city's application for $75,000 in matching federal grant funds to build a splash park. Some favored the idea but most spoke out against it.

Lori L. Hill of Lawrenceburg was one of the first people to comment on a concept illustration of the future splash park.

"I believe that there are many things that we could better use our money on than a splash park," Hill said via e-mail. "I think that it is ridiculous to spend that kind of money on something that only a limited number of citizens would use."

If awarded the Land and Water Conservation grant, the city would need to contribute 50 percent of its own money to the splash park project, which is projected to cost about $150,000-160,000 total.

Should the city not receive the grant, it would be up to the council to decide to move forward with the project on its own.

Mayor Edwinna Baker and City Clerk Robbie Hume said following an April 8 public hearing that the city would not likely continue with plans for a splash park without the federal matching funds.

The splash park, a projected 3,000 square feet, would include various water sprayers, shooters and spouts in the shape of sports equipment, marine life and other animals intended for the use of Anderson County children and their families.

No specific design or concept for the "wet play area" has been finalized, according to Hume.

The majority of Facebook commentators used social media not only to comment on the potential splash park, but also to express their desire for a pool facility in Anderson County.

"We need to think of all the pros and cons of doing such things before we jump in to get a grant to build it. Who will maintain it; do we have the funds to employee people? Do we have something in place to keep people from vandalizing; do we have the manpower to keep a watch on such thing? There are just so many things that need to be considered. I think we need to use our money wisely, and to me this is not a wise choice," said Hill.

Emily Harper Durr of Lawrenceburg agreed.

"I vote pool," Durr wrote on Facebook. "Teenagers and adults will not use a splash park."

Brittany Leigh Brown commented that she was not sure how much a pool cost, but she was sure it was triple what the splash park would cost.

"I'd rather have a pool too, but I'm thinking this is being offered bc [sic] the price is more doable. Just my guess."

Laura Whiston Johnson Hanks left several Facebook comments in favor of building a splash park and, eventually a pool: "When our local fella's [sic] live in fear, we will never have a community of growth and prosper! Think it is a great idea and we could have all kinds of things surrounding it ... miniature golf, shuffleboard, tennis, etc."

"I can't see anything wrong with both, it's a win win either way ... we have to start somewhere!"

"I think it's a lovely thing," Jessica Hicks, of Lawrenceburg said in a phone interview, adding she thinks there should be more activities for little kids.

But others, like Kim Puckett, thought otherwise and said so on social media.

"Pool, pool, pool!" Puckett wrote on The Anderson News' Facebook page. "Creates jobs and helps our county grow! My back would definitely love a pool. I would buy a membership and go every day."

"Think about everyone! Not just the kids!"

In a September 2011 article in The Anderson News, County Judge-Executive John Wayne Conway renewed his vow in creating a pool in Anderson County, at that time stating revenue could come from events in the county park such as truck and tractor pulls.

Anderson County has not had a public swimming pool in more than a decade after the one located in the American Legion park closed.

SPLASH

Water supplied to the splash park would be paid for from city park funds, Hume said. The water features at the splash park would be on a timer, and the water would be shut off at night.

The city council voted 4-1 to move forward with applying for the federal grant, with one council member voting against because of concerns about vandalism.

Hume said that the city expects to receive an answer on whether or not it received the federal grant by Fall 2013. Construction on the splash park would begin next summer at the earliest.

Hume said the city did not seek permission from the American Legion prior to applying for the Land and Water Conservation grant, saying it was not necessary before more permanent plans for the splash park were in place.

Other past improvements at the city park followed a similar procedure, including a Land and Water Conservation grant for the park's recreational trails built in 2006. No permission was required from the Legion before pursuing that project and the walking trails' grant, Hume said.

"No, I think that once we get farther down the road if we get the grant, and the project has funding to move forward, I think out of courtesy there would be a conversation with the Legion about the project," Hume said. "Not a formal request for permission, I don't think that's necessary."

Regarding a question about constructing a splash park on public park property, no one from the city contacted County Judge-Executive John Wayne Conway about building a splash park in the Anderson County community park, Hume said.

"Unless it was a partnership amongst everyone like the skate park, it wouldn't be appropriate," Hume said.

Mayor Baker could not be reached for comment as of press time due to a family emergency.

pets' names written on them in permanent marker, Shrout said. Some of the money stolen included a few $2 bills with employees' names on them, and a few $5 bills with multiple pets' names written on them.

If local businesses notice anyone trying to pay with those kinds of bills, contact the police, Shrout said.

Police Chief Chris Atkins said the Lawrenceburg police department is still investigating the break in, and that only cash was taken.

Police have a few suspects, Atkins said, but could not release names.

"I would like them to retrieve the money back, if it is trying to be cashed in," he said.

Shrout said the amount of money stolen in last week's break in was a little more than $100, donations that the restaurant had been collecting since January 2013.

Shrout said he reported the break in to police last Friday morning after an employee found broken glass at the restaurant, and that police are currently investigating the case.

Someone has already written a check to cover the cost of the missing donations for the Humane Society, Shrout said, and the restaurant will continue to hold the "dollar wall" fundraiser.

But instead of posting dollar bills, they'll be printing off photos of dogs and cats for patrons to write their pets' names on.

The dollar bills, Shrout said, will be locked up.

file the suit in Shelby Circuit Court.

In his motion to dismiss, Dutton points out that Myles performed the service for Diane Stucker and her late husband in 2004, and at that time his office and residence were each in Shelby County.

"There does not appear to be any connection with Anderson County other than Robert W. Myles has a part-time job with the City of Lawrenceburg," Dutton wrote in his motion to dismiss.

"The defendant is at a loss for any reason why the plaintiff would have filed suit in Anderson County other than to cause embarrassment to the defendant or the plaintiff's unwillingness to drive to Shelby County to file the complaint."

Myles does maintain a law office in Lawrenceburg. According to business license records on file in city hall, Myles has purchased a city business license in the name of Myles Law Office, located at 100 North Main St., which is the address for city hall.

Myles apparently does not pay rent for the office space, which is located on the third floor.

A check of county business license records revealed that Myles does not have a county business license under his name or for Myles Law Office.

In the lawsuit he filed against Myles, Nutgrass wrote that the Stuckers' "received no proceeds from the sale of the vast majority of the personal property" sold as a "result of [Myles'] failure to exercise ordinary care in the performance of his duties."

when someone accidentally stepped on her backpack at Saffell Street Elementary School.

“I want to get enough money to replace it,” she said.

Doing so won’t be easy, but for Leah it certainly is fun. Each day before school she gets up and tends her growing flock of poultry, including the 125 chicks her grandfather, who lives next door, bought to get her started in the business.

Once school is over, she’s hard at it again, ensuring her chicks are fed, watered and nestled in under several heat lamps.

Then she heads to the “Saloon,” a chicken house built by her dad that serves as home to a pair of miniature roosters and Henny, a chicken Leah says will come when she calls.

The duck pen comes next, where residents include Donald, Daffy, Huey, Dewey and Louie, along with Aflac, who looks suspiciously like the insurance-selling duck on television.

For her efforts, Leah said she hopes to sell the chicks in a month or so for $5 to $6 each, a nifty net profit being that her grandfather only paid a buck a bird.

She plans to sell them during the bi-monthly chicken swaps that are held the first and third Saturday of each month in the West Park Shopping Place in front of Tractor Supply.

The swaps begin around 8 a.m., and have included a full cast of farm critters, including goats, that people will sell or swap for just about anything.

The next gathering is this Saturday.

Leah said she’s thankful for the help she’s received in getting her poultry-raising career off the ground.

“I love my dad and thank him for helping me do this,” she said, adding that her first year of raising chickens certainly won’t be her last.

After her first batch of chicks is sold, Leah said she has not plans to slowing down and wants to make raising and selling poultry a career.

“When I grow up I want to live on a farm, sell chickens and make kids happy,” she said.

Return to Haiti, the 12th edition

Stepping off the plane in Haiti, David Montgomery first smelled the trash.

"I'd been through some poor countries before, but when I hit Haiti, just the smell, the trash was everywhere, just like a tour of the landfill out here," Montgomery said.

Meaghan Downs
Staff writer

The Anderson County magistrate's memories of all he's done, seen and heard on the Caribbean island run together.

After 12 trips to Haiti in 14 years, it can be difficult to keep his timeline straight.

He's heard stories of Haitians who ran through a barbed wire fence following the 2010 earthquake's aftershock. They sought to become closer to God by getting closer to his mission group's compound, he said.

He's delivered kits of clothing and baby bottles to new mothers and helped construct an orphanage.

On this year's trip to Haiti at the end of March, Montgomery noticed progress.

Progress has come slowly to Haiti, perhaps moving faster due to the devastating 2010 earthquake that demolished many of the older buildings, Montgomery said.

In 2013, progress looked like the Dumpsters Montgomery saw in the capital city of Port-au-Prince.

"A person who's never been [to Haiti] before would think there weren't any improvements," he said.

Montgomery decided to go to Haiti that first year after hearing about the experiences of his wife Cheri, who went with Lifeline Christian Missions, based out of Columbus, Ohio, the year before.

And for more than a decade now, Montgomery returns every year to the same Haitian city, Grand Goâve.

Grand Goâve is his annual vacation destination.

Grand Goâve is home for about two weeks of labor-intensive work and Christian witness to the Haitian people.

Grand Goâve is Montgomery's yearly spiritual mecca to come closer to God during morning devotions on the rooftop of the Lifeline Christian Missions' compound.

"It is a vacation for me because I get away from cell phones, from everything and I can concentrate on helping people and focus on God," he said.

It would be hard to get away from Samuel, who seeks out the mission group Montgomery travels with every year.

Since the beginning of his yearly journey to Haiti, Montgomery has known a boy named Samuel who would lead the group up into the mountains

Well, Samuel is not a boy of 8 or 9 anymore. He's 24 or 25 now, Montgomery said.

"Every year I go back, he's there and he always comes looking for us," he said.

Hannah Casciola, 17, one of several Anderson and Franklin County residents who travelled with Montgomery this year, went looking for one Haitian boy on her first trip to Haiti.

Yvetto, 4 years old. Casciola, along with a few friends and now her church youth group, help "sponsor" Yvetto for about $35 a month.

During Casciola's time in Haiti (her first mission trip ever), the home schooled junior had the opportunity to meet Yvetto.

"It was really cool to be able to meet this child and to see that he was getting the care other children didn't," she said.

Casciola, who said she wants to be a foreign missionary after high school, said she would love to go back to Haiti, perhaps as many times as Montgomery has.

Depends on where the Lord leads her, she said.

"I definitely want to go back to Haiti as often as He lets me," she said.

As for Montgomery,

he's already planned his 13th trip to Haiti for Feb. 10-18, 2014.

"As long as the good Lord lets me go, I'm going to go," he said.

Guarantee your child is prepared for school by starting at home

Is your child ready for school?

Child assessments are revealing that the majority of Kentucky children are not ready for success in school. Statewide only 28 percent of children are ready for kindergarten without additional support.

Joan Martin
Guest columnist

Anderson County didn't participate in the pilot screening so no local information is available for 2012.

The Governor's Office of Early Childhood prepared a list of 10 social and emotional development skills of children who are ready for kindergarten. Review the list and observe your child or grandchild to determine if your child has some of the attributes needed for a successful experience in school.

1. Curious and initiates learning experiences. Persists in activities and tasks.

2. Explores and tries new things. Asks questions and knows rules.

3. Learning to work well alone and also cooperate with other children.

4. Follows simple instructions and uses self-control. Can help with simple chores.

5. Participates and shows interest in creative activities. Uses a variety of materials.

6. Expresses a positive outlook. Expresses needs and wants through spoken language.

7. Cooperates and shows concern for others. Gives help to others.

8. Engages in symbolic/imaginative play with self and friends (plays house, community helper, etc.)

9. Tries new activities and asks questions.

10. Listens to adults and follows simple directions. Shows independence in self-help skills such as eating, dressing, etc.

What can you do to help your child be prepared for learning?

First, recognize that what you do at home makes the biggest difference in your child's readiness for school.

Spend time with your children playing games, reading stories, doing art work, etc. Try these eight activities to increase your child's readiness for school.

1. Read stories to children that involve feelings.

2. Draw pictures with your child, sing songs, and encourage creativity.

3. Help children work together with such activities as blocks, sand toys, etc.

4. Play games that involve give and take. Play Mother May I, Simon Says, Candy Land, Chutes and Ladders, and other childhood favorites. Taking turns is a good thing to learn and video games don't always provide that option.

5. Give children routines (such as bedtime, mealtime, and play time) and tasks (simple chores) at home. The time you spend teaching simple chores to your child will pay off later in school. We aren't doing a favor for our children if we do all the chores. They need to learn age

Prepare your trees for new breed of fruit-killing fly this spring

Schedule regular maintenance to protect against pests, disease

I love the smell of fresh cut grass. To me, it carries the scent of watermelon, which always sends my brain to warm summer days and plenty of sunshine.

Smell is the strongest memory trigger we have and that red fruit transforms me to childhood days of running sprinklers and seed spitting contests. Summer isn't here yet, but it is coming.

Two of my most favorite holidays are coming, too. Earth Day will be here on the 22nd and Arbor Day is close behind on the 26th. This year, I've gotten a head start on my festivities.

Two years of drought took their toll on my new fruit trees, so I replaced many of them. Though I am a one of the last people to give up on a sick or dying plant, fruit trees are a different matter entirely.

Fruit trees are like homes. You have to care for them over the course of decades and regular maintenance makes all the difference. You can either spend your time cleaning up ugly fruit that has littered the lawn or gathering the harvest for canning, freezing or drying. OK, there will still be a little clean up, but not much.

Most fruit trees need a regular program of spraying to protect against pests and disease and the easiest way to school yourself is to go online or visit the extension office to get brochures on the spraying of fruit trees. While you're at it, mark the times for spraying on your calendar. You'll have healthier trees and bigger harvests.

Those of you who already have your own home orchard may want to watch for something new this year. It's called the Spotted Wing Drosophila and it's been spreading across commercial orchards in the US over the last several larvae eat the inside of the fruit and set up rotting from the inside. Not pleasant. Set up monitoring traps and pick ripe fruit frequently.

It is now time to fertilize your trees to help them stay healthy through whatever kind of summer we get here in Kentucky. Fertilizer for trees, shrubs and plants is like a vitamin pill. Those of you who don't take a vitamin may not realize everything it does, but trust me, it does good.

Trees growing in the wild benefit from all the leaf litter and critter litter allowed to lie on the ground. We don't allow that to happen in our lawns. There are vital nutrients that must be present to allow other nutrients to be taken up by the roots of the tree. So, your best bet is to use a liquid fertilizer that you get into the ground through aeration of the soil.

My dad used to put on his golf shoes and walk around the base of the trees before pouring a bucket of rotted fish skins, composted horse manure and water. My mother followed with the wheelbarrow full of mulch to cover up the smell. They did it each spring and we never lost a tree, except to storms. You can buy liquid fertilizer if you

Splash park location just downright ridiculous

Column as I see 'em ... Just when I start to think the city council is ready to bury the hatchet with county government, it steps up and reaf-firms just how wide the chasm between the two really is.

Ben Carlson
Publisher

The city's decision to move forward with a splash park is the latest indicator of how unwilling it is to join forces with county government for the benefit of this community. The splash park is slated to be built on private property owned by the American Legion and leased to the city for $1 a year. The decision to spend tax dollars to improve private property is highly questionable, and in most cases flies in the face of state laws that prevent government bodies from doing so.

And if that weren't bad enough, putting a splash park on Legion property when a swimming facility will soon be built in the county park is downright ridiculous.

City officials can feign ignorance over the county's plan to build a swimming facility all they want, but they know one is coming, and soon.

Judge-Executive John Wayne Conway campaigned on the issue and one would have to be a fool to think he's not going to deliver on that promise in the remaining 20 months of his first term in office.

Were the city council and mayor able to work with Conway and set aside goofy grudges about parking spots, water bills and solid waste funds, the splash park would have been a perfect complement to a swimming facility in the county park that will be a showcase for this community for decades.

There is a reason this perfectly positioned community for economic development remains so frustratingly impotent, and it isn't only because of the weak economy.

It's because at every turn those who are supposed to have our best interests in mind instead resort to parochial pettiness that limits not only their visions of the future, but our collective ability to put on a united front to attract jobs and industry that this community sorely needs.

Keep that in mind next time you read or hear about a neighboring county's economic development success, and remember that, in Lawrenceburg, our leaders can't even make a good decision on where to build a splash park for kids.

Speaking of good decisions ... I attended a luncheon at the senior center last week hosted by the American Red Cross, which is looking to build a stronger relationship with Anderson County.

While there I learned about a rift between Anderson County and the Red Cross that dates back a couple of decades and included the agency pulling its charter due to lack of solid book and record keeping.

The Red Cross still provides its incredible services but blood drives simply don't happen because this is supposedly the turf of the Central Kentucky Blood Bank, which provides blood donated here to the hospital at UK.

I hold no ill will toward the blood bank, but struggle to understand why Anderson County would prefer to use it instead of the Red Cross, which provides blood to nearby Frankfort Regional Medical Center and relies on that revenue to provide emergency services in our community. Timmy Perry's recent house fire comes immediately to mind.

Chances are you will hear plenty from the Red Cross in coming months, and hopefully those who remember real or imagined past transgressions will be able to move past those issues and welcome the agency back into Lawrenceburg with open arms, and arteries.

Speaking of for profit ... My faith in youth was restored last Friday while interviewing Leah Zimmerman, a precocious 9-year-old bent on selling chickens to raise money to replace her broken iPad.

Leah shattered two stereotypes about today's youth: they don't understand the value of a dollar and are too lazy to figure it out.

Leah gets it on both fronts: She's turning $1 chicks into $5 chickens and is busting her butt feeding and caring for them.

I don't know for sure, but I'll bet she doesn't spend the remaining hours of her day slack-jawed and staring at video games.

You go, girl.

6. Encourage curiosity and answer questions. There are library books that encourage a child's curiosity and that provide answers to questions like "Why is the sky blue?" "Where do the colors come from in the rainbow?" etc. You already know the answers to many of these questions.

7. Be a model of respect towards others and helping children understand other's feelings.

8. Teach children basic information such as their complete name,

Enjoy your children's curiosity. Find teachable moments. Remember that you are your child's best teacher.

Change of venue hearing postponed in child abuse case

From staff reports
Last Friday's circuit court hearing on a change of venue request for the three people charged with first-degree criminal child abuse of a 3-year-old girl was postponed.
Commonwealth's Attorney Laura Donnell said Monday that she could not disclose the reason for the postponement, and said another hearing on that request has not yet been scheduled.
The child's grandmother, Carolyn Case, and her mother and step-father, Herbert and Rebecca Medley, were each charged last year with tying up the child for up to 16 hours a day.

Their case was scheduled to go to trial last month, but Case's attorney, public defender Scott Getsinger, made a motion to have the trial moved out of Anderson County.
"There's been a lot of publicity," Scott Getsinger said during a hearing earlier this year in Anderson Circuit Court when he introduced his motion for a change of venue. "I'm not sure the people of this county can [fairly] hear this case."

They were scheduled to go to trial last month, but the venue change request has pushed that into May.
All three previously pleaded not guilty to the charge, which was brought against them last September following an investigation by the Kentucky State Police and social services.
The charge stems from a state police investigation during which Case reportedly told troopers that the 3-year-old was tied to her bed from 8 p.m. to 6 a.m. each day.

She also acknowledged that the child was also tied to the bed for a two-hour nap, and spent an additional four hours tied up for discipline, according to the documents. She was also tied up to a booster seat in a kitchen chair for up to an hour a day for discipline.
The child was tied up with a curtain sash by lacing it through the arm holes in her shirt and behind her back. It was then fastened to the bed using a large horse collar safety pin, according to court documents. The sash was also used to tie her to a kitchen chair.

Case, the grandmother, told investigating troopers with the Kentucky State Police that the girl "spent more time tied up than free," according to documents.
Case also told investigators that she was tied up because she was "getting out of bed and getting into things," and that she was trying to "get out of the residence when everyone was asleep."
Case added that the girl's mother, Rebecca Medley, "would tie [the girl] up very tightly and that [her] movement was very impaired and she was not able to escape."

The girl was being tied up from June 1 through Aug. 3, when a child protective services worker alerted the state police.
Herbert Medley told police he knew about the girl being tied up but "felt he could not tell anyone because Case had threatened to kick them out of the residence."
He said that Case started the practice and showed his wife how to do it.

ready in related fields, according to KDE.

The guidelines – which are voluntary and can be chosen for adoption on a state-by-state basis – are the first broad educational science requirements for the nation in more than 15 years.

Next Generation Science Standards are meant to serve as guidelines, not as mandated curriculum, though they meet do the standards for science as outlined in Senate Bill 1, and Kentucky's current accountability model Unbridled Learning.

"It's not a huge change in that respect," Kentucky Department of Education spokeswoman Nancy Rodriguez said of the inclusion of evolution in student curriculum. "That's [evolution] not a totally new concept."

Evolution is currently a part of Kentucky's science standards, Rodriguez said, the topic being introduced in some areas at the elementary level.

The new standards shift some of the concepts on biological change and evolution to begin at the middle school level, she said.

In the standards' performance expectations for the life science unit titled "Biological Evolution: Unity and Diversity," "Students can construct explanations based on evidence to support fundamental understandings of natural selection and evolution. They can use ideas of genetic variation in a population to make sense of organisms surviving and reproducing, hence passing on the traits of the species."

Climate change would be a new concept for middle

The Next Generation Science Standards guidelines can be found in a complete, 95-page pdf at www.nextgenscience.org/next-generation-science-standards. school science instruction in Kentucky if the state education department adopts the Next Generation Science Standards, Rodriguez said.

The Next Generation Science Standards do not reflect a specific district's curriculum, according to Rodriguez; curriculum changes would be up to districts to develop based on guidance from KDE.

But if the Kentucky Board of Education approves the standards, it would become a part of the Kentucky curriculum, Superintendent Sheila Mitchell and Instructional Supervisor Sharon Jackman said in an e-mail interview.

K-PREP, state tests taken at the elementary and middle school levels and used to assess achievement for accountability, is developed using these state standards.

"In order to have a firm opinion on the science standards, in-depth understanding is needed," Mitchell and Jackman said via e-mail in response to a question about the standards taking a firm stance on evolution and the addition of global climate change. "Teachers and administrators need time to review and study the standards to understand the meanings. The Kentucky Department of Education has not officially started their deconstruction of standards as they are on the June agenda for final approval. Once they are approved and KDE begins their work, the school districts will have more in-depth understanding of the concept expectations/meaning of the standards."

The guidelines are to be reviewed by the Kentucky Board of Education in a second reading in June, Rodriguez said.

If adopted, then the Next Generation Science Standards would move through a regulatory process including public reading and public hearings before state legislative committees. The science standards are scheduled to be implemented by the 2014-2015 school year with the first assessments given by Spring 2015, according to KDE.

Anderson Co. Drug Court celebrates graduation

From staff reports
Anderson County Drug Court recently celebrated the April 12 graduation of Anderson County residents Josh Case and Josh Williams from the Drug Court program.

Drug Court, which serves Anderson, Shelby and Spencer counties, was established by Chief Circuit Judge Charles Hickman in 2007. The program's mission statement is "to empower our participants to live substance-free lives by promoting positive change in criminal and addictive behaviors that lead to personal responsibility and productive citizenship."

"All we do is give our participants the tools to carry out that mission statement," Hickman, the guest speaker at the graduation ceremony, said. "I think they can tell you they have been empowered by our program."

Graduates of the Drug Court program are required to complete four phases of the program for a 15-18 month commitment, including 12 months of active participation and community service projects.

Those interested in volunteering with the Drug Court program can contact the steering committee at First Christian Church in Lawrenceburg.

FARM BUREAU AGENT ARLIE GRITTON RETIRED

50 YEARS AGO
April 17, 1963

It was thought that the last team of oxen used in Anderson County was owned by Jim A. Leathers. Many of our older citizens remembered the sturdy ox as he pulled the plow or dragged the heavy saw logs to the mill.

In remote section of the Eastern Kentucky mountains the ox was still be used. A pair of ox shoes that were being displayed in the Anderson News window were secured by Wyatt Shely from a friend in Johnson County, where the ox is still in common use.

Note: Mr. Shely was an educator and historian in Anderson County for many years. Jim A. Leathers was somewhat of a character. Stories have been told of his antics when it came to being the strongest man in Anderson County to the point that he lifted two men off the ground when he was well into his 70s. If anyone has any information on Jim A. Leathers, send the information to Janie Bowen, jbowen@theanderson-news.com Porterhouse steak was 89 cents a pound at A&P Supermarket. Sirloin was 69 cents and round steak was 69 cents a pound. A 20-pound bag of red potatoes was 69 cents.

R. L. Davenport was commissioned a Kentucky Colonel to the staff of Gov. Bert Combs.

Army 2nd Lt. John L. Hume, 22, son of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Hume, Alton Station, completed an eight-week officer orientation course at the Artillery and Missile Center, Fort Sill, Okla.

York announced the drive to raise $40,000 to construct the lake had passed the halfway mark at $20,800 that had been pledged in $100 bonds to date. Don't find romantic love in all the wrong places

In 2008 TIME magazine ran an article titled "Are Romantic Movies Bad For You?" The article covered what researchers at Heriot Watt University's Family and Personal Relationships Laboratory in Edinburgh, Scotland, found when they completed a study of 40 Hollywood romantic comedies released between 1995-2005. They found that problems typically reported by couples in relationship counseling at their center reflect misconceptions about love and romance depicted in Hollywood films. The idea was that what Hollywood sells as typical love relationships and romance are actually fictitious, embellished, air-brushed and presented as reality. The researchers cautioned against watching too many movies of this genre, warning that a slow desensitization occurs in the minds of those who are looking for meaning and how love works. While I believe this is correct, what they didn't address as problematic is even more dangerous, namely that the majority of romance movies present romance on the basis of one thing: lust. Pre-marital or extra-marital sex is presented as the basis of the relationship, which is seen as the culmination of the courting, enticing and pursuing, when in reality such behavior actually drives us further from our creator and his design for human romance and relationships. The reason for this misconception is because the world is, at its heart, sinful in its affections. This is why scripture commands us not to love the world or the things of the world (1 John 2:15). This is not referring to people but worldly possessions and principles. We are to love our neighbors, our enemies and our brothers more than ourselves. We are to love Jesus supremely above all. The Bible does teach that the world is a place that is passing away, whose inhabitants do not know God, and they even hate those who follow God. The world is a place that contains many people who teach contrary to the Word of God, and are even the antithesis of the person and work of Christ. Those who are of this world listen to its teachers and is under the power and influence of Satan himself. This affects, everything - including our relationships. This is why so many marriages end in divorce, and why many of our young people are forsaking marriage altogether. This is the root of all sexual sin - whether heterosexual or homosexual - that seeks to snub God's standard of sexuality which is the one flesh relationship between one man and one woman within the covenant of marriage for life. God is the standard of love (1 John 4:8) that cannot be improved upon. It was this love that sent His Son the Lord Jesus Christ to this earth to live a perfect life and die a substitutionary death on the cross, securing salvation for all who trust Him by faith (1 John 4:9-10). It is God's love that brings us into a relationship with Him, thus improving our relationships with others. Call out to Christ and know the love of God for yourself today!

God is the standard of love (1 John 4:8) that cannot be improved upon.

IMPUTED RIGHTEOUSNESS

Some have greatly erred in believing that "imputed righteousness" is the imputation of the perfect, personal righteousness of Christ to the sinner. There is no authority to state that one's personal righteousness can be imputed to another.

Paul by the power of the Holy Spirit showed that the righteousness possessed by the sinner (through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ) is attained through the forgiveness or pardon of sins. Paul quotes David as saying, "Blessed is the man whose iniquities are forgiven." (Psa. 32:1-5; Romans 4:6-8).

Christ, the perfect, divine victim, offered Himself as man's substitute on the cross to make possible man's forgiveness without violating Divine Law. When the sinner accepts this atoning sacrifice (Romans 3:24-25; 1 John 2:1-2) through the obedience of the gospel (1 Cor. 15:1-4; Matt. 28:18-20; Mark 16:15-16; Luke 24:46-47; Acts 2:38, 47) he is pardoned, and then stands righteous before God. The sinner had stood condemned, but through forgiveness he has now become guiltless and therefore possesses "imputed righteousness."

Isaiah 59:1-2 points out plainly that the sins of the people separate them from God. God sees and knows the sins of man. The New Testament speaks of "your sins" and "thy sins" (Acts 3:19; 22:16). "For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their lawless deeds I will remember no more" (Heb. 8:12). God gave His Son (John 3:16-17) and again it is through that atoning sacrifice that we can have our iniquities forgiven and can be pronounce righteousness.

Lawrenceburg man gets ink to warn of medical condition

If Martin Elder is hurt in a car accident, search for his tattoo immediately.

Flip over his left forearm. Find the black snakes intertwined around a winged staff, the all-caps word "diabetic" inscribed underneath.

Slightly pink, Elder's new medical tattoo is still healing.

After undergoing a triple bypass surgery in November 2011, the Lawrenceburg man understands healing, scars and pain.

Elder certainly isn't afraid of needles after being diagnosed with Type II diabetes three years ago. He gives himself insulin shots every day.

A tattoo needle is nothing.

"After having the bypass surgery, something like the tattoo needle didn't bother me," Elder said.

But his medical ID bracelet and necklace bothered him.

The medical jewelry — which are typically worn to warn professionals of a medical condition in an emergency — were irritating Elder's skin and aggravating the scars on his chest from the bypass operation.

So Elder had an idea: trade the temporary medical jewelry for a more permanent solution.

Since he was a kid, Elder wanted a tattoo. He imagined a skull with flames on it, but the medical ID tattoo fit the bill, he said.

"Never got around to it, and then when I was working for the state police, couldn't have one then," Elder, a 62-year-old retired Kentucky state trooper, said. "So I'm kind of fulfilling my bucket list."

Before he started his online research, Elder said he had no idea medical tattoos even existed.

But to Elder's surprise, he immediately found about 50-60 medical tattoo designs on the Internet.

"There were more, but I just found the one I was interested in," Elder said of his chosen tattoo design.

His tattoo resembles a medical alert bracelet with only one small difference — the bracelet's red color exchanged for black tattoo ink.

Elder said he had been contemplating the tattoo for about a year, but didn't make his decision until three weeks ago after he heard a new tattoo parlor was opening at Hilltop Drive in Thinking about a medical tattoo?

Martin Elder can't wear a medical ID jewelry because it irritates his skin, so he decided upon a tattoo with the word 'diabetic' in case of medical emergencies.

But if others are thinking about getting a medical ID tattoo like his, Elder said to check with a doctor first. It's also important to get the tattoo in a place where a medical alert bracelet or necklace would typically be found, such as on the wrist or chest.

Some people with diabetes, Elder said, can't get medical tattoos because they're unable to heal very well. Elder said a diabetic's blood sugar needs to be at a stable level before sitting down in a tattoo parlor.

Elder did his research online to choose which design suited him best, and would recommend others do the same if they're interested in getting a medical tattoo.

Elder's design features black ink instead of the typical red found on most medical alert jewelry, but tattoo artist Mike Jones said black is better for long-term results. "Fifteen to 20 years, it'll fade," Jones said of red ink. "Black will never go away."

Lawrenceburg.

When Elder walked in last Tuesday morning, he was the first customer ever for the New World of Art tattoo parlor, and the first customer that morning for tattoo artist Mike Jones.

Jones, who recently expanded his tattoo business from Cincinnati to Lawrenceburg, said in his 25 years as a tattoo artist, he's inked about six or seven medical tattoos.

He remembers filling in medical symbols like Elder's snakes and staff and sketching tattoos of customers' rare blood types. He's created faux areola following a customer's breast reconstruction.

A retired English teacher in Ohio, who wanted to be cremated when he died, once asked Jones to tattoo "do not embalm."

"I really like the idea," Jones said of medical tattoos like Elder's. Jones said he hasn't had any other Anderson County residents ask for similar tattoos since Elder received his.

"Anything like that, I really like to get involved in it," Jones said.

Jones has even tried to persuade his father, a 74-year-old retired from the military with absolutely no tattoos, to think about a permanent medical ID.

His father's answer is still no, but Jones said he's not giving up.

"I'm working on him," Jones said with a chuckle.

Age doesn't matter, Elder said, at least not for him.

"The friends thought it was pretty cool. I haven't really told any of my family, other than my wife," he said, adding he just hasn't had time to inform many of his relatives. "She was fine with it."

As the medical alert markings become more popular, Elder said, he hopes more medical professionals and doctors will recommend personnel to check for a tattoo if they can't find a medical ID bracelet or necklace.

It's an idea that's just getting started, he said, one that, of course, starts with consulting a doctor.

"If they're not able to wear the medical alert bracelets or necklaces, it's an idea to look at," Elder said. "Some diabetics can't do the tattoo, because they don't heal as well."

He's already thought of another tattoo design — an anatomically correct heart with the words "triple bypass" written underneath.

Not a Valentine's heart, Elder said quickly.

No, a heart that could be a "badge of honor" of what Elder went through during his heart surgery.

"I thought the heart would look better than a dragon," he said jokingly.

The heart will have to wait, according to Elder, until his new scars heal.

No home field advantage for Bearcat baseball

Early-season road trips mirror issues in other sports

You have heard of the home field advantage, but what about the home field non-advantage?

That is the case for several Anderson County High School sports teams right now. If you want to put the most positive spin on things, it's not good.

Truthfully, it is an embarrassment to the programs, the school and Anderson County.

If you have been following Bearcat baseball this spring, you know that as of April 16, Anderson had not had a home baseball game yet. That is over a month since the start of the 2013 season.

Repeat. Anderson has gone over a month into the season - 13 games through the weekend - without a home game.

It's not because Anderson coach L.W. Barnes is a sadistic sort who feels his team would be better served by being road warriors. Over the years, Barnes has played his share of the state's best programs on the road, but he's also brought many of them to Lawrenceburg, too. He'll play just about anybody, anywhere.

The Bearcats had some big names scheduled to visit: Dunbar early in the season, Louisville Trinity was to have sent its junior varsity and freshman teams to Anderson. The Dunbar game was moved to Lexington while the junior varsity and freshmen games were canceled.

And last night, a resurgent Shelby County, ranked 22nd in the state, had been scheduled to visit, but late last week, that ultra-important district game was relocated to Shelby's home field. A rescheduling was really not an option as weather can play havoc with high school baseball and you have to get those district games in.

To add an insult to the plight of a team that has not even practiced on its home field this year, Anderson had been scheduled to host the Eighth Region Tournament this spring. There had been speculation all spring that Anderson would not be able to do so now and Monday, Barnes confirmed just that.

Anderson's field was still not ready this week following some desperately needed off-season renovation work. An unusual winter weather pattern, when most of the worst weather arrived just before the start of spring sports. I am no turf specialist, but my understanding is that the late winter storms came at the exact time the finishing touches of the renovation had been scheduled to be made.

So, while it has been frustrating for the baseball Bearcats this spring, the immediate cause of no home-field advantage apparently can be seen as one of those unfortunate things you just can't control.

But is it? Or is it just the latest in a pattern of shortcomings in Anderson County athletic facilities.

Last week, when I used Twitter to announce the Bearcat baseball game with Shelby County had been moved, I added a note, "Anderson's field is still not ready."

A few minutes later, I got a reply that said, "The track isn't either. Sounds like an epidemic."

Chances are track enthusiasts would not feel too bad for Anderson baseball since it has been over 10 years since the program has hosted a home meet.

That's not just sad. It's ridiculous, especially when one considers the number of kids - well over 100 - participating in track from Anderson County High School and Anderson County Middle School.

Then there are the Anderson soccer teams who play on a pitch that is not even regulation size and is marked by dangerous drainage grates

Powerful victory, but not perfection

Lady Bearcats pound Collins, seize control of district race

SHELBYVILLE - There were plenty of reasons for Anderson County to be happy Monday night, but the Lady Bearcats' 30th District win over Collins was far from perfect.

To be sure, Anderson flexed its muscles quickly with a five-run uprising in the top of the first.

The Lady Bearcats added another in the second but instead of coasting to a rout, Anderson had to work for the win.

"We didn't play well," said Anderson coach Brian Glass, who saw his team improve to a surprising 14-2. Anderson also took control of the district seeding race and now only needs to beat Spencer County (1-7) next week to claim the No. 1 slot for the

But a 10-4 win that turned out to be a bit tougher than it should have been prompted Glass to remind his team it still has a long way to go.

"These kids are young but they have to learn that when you have a team down, you finish them off," Glass said.

Still, there were some major bright spots. Eighth-

Bearcat track gets victory, personal bests

Moninger, Duncan strong at Tuesday meet

The Anderson County boys' track team scored an impressive win at Collins last Tuesday, outdistancing the host school, 104-96 in a five-team all-comers meet.

The Bearcats got strong performances from Casey Moninger, who won the 400-meter dash with a 52.60 time, and Connor Duncan, who took the 300-meter hurdles (42.96) and placed second in the 110-meter event (17.66) while Tyson Yett took the triple jump with 38-feet-10-inch effort.

Anderson also got a bit of a surprise boost from junior Ethan Woodrow, who placed second in the 200-meters (25.62), third in the 400 (56.83) and third in the long jump (18-05).

"Ethan continues to improve his personal record every meet in the long jump. I am really impressed by his work ethic," Anderson coach Robert Meacham said. "I had him run the 400-meters on a whim. It was his first time running that race and he placed third with a very impressive first time."

The Anderson girls did not fare as well, finishing fifth in a meet won by Shelby County. Eighth-grade standout Alorra Sims did not compete in the meet as she has been nursing a knee injury. "She would have scored 40 points by herself had she been there," Meacham said.

Meacham noted the girls' team did get some bright spots from a group of eighth-grade throwers who competed with the varsity. Rachel Baker and Briana Rooks were strong in the shot put and discus while Brittany Goodman was close to Baker in the shot.

"I was very excited about their showing and can't wait to see how they improve with us," Meacham said.

The coach also noted Tiffany Yount had a strong day in both the high jump and long jump.

Anderson teams improve at Tates Creek, Sims sets school record

The Bearcats and Lady Bearcats did not place as high at Tates Creek on Saturday - the boys finished 11th, the girls 10th - but Meacham said, "It was a big day! Many more personal records and we were up against the best competition in the state."

The field included most of the Lexington schools along with Louisville Trinity, among others.

Sims broke her own school record in the triple jump with an effort of 33-05, seven inches better than before. "Alorra proved she will be the name on the wall for many years," Meacham said.

Sims finished second in the competition. Teammate Tiffany Yount also placed high, with a personal best 31-07 effort in the triple jump, good enough for sixth place at Tates Creek.

Yett also finished second in the boys' triple jump with a leap of 40-01.50.

Duncan also shaved time off his 300-meter hurdle race with a 42.79 that was a National Elite time and good enough for fourth place at the loaded meet.

Others having personal bests included first-year pole vaulter Paul Leskiv, who cleared nine feet, and Patrick Burns with a 100-meter dash of 12 seconds and a 200-meter time of 24.82. "He is dedicated to getting faster and it is showing up on the track," Meacham said.

Distance runners Brian Franklin, and Elle Buser showed they could be strong at the regional meet. Franklin lowered his previous best in the 3,200 meters by nearly a minute (11:34.90) which now puts him in the top ten in the region along with teammate Jacob Brumley (11:09.22). Buser, a seventh-grader, blistered the track with a 2:38.60 time in the 800-meter run, which was good enough for 11th place. "That is the fastest middle school girls' time I have ever seen," Meacham said.

Casey Moninger had a personal best of 2:11.05 in the 800-meters and placed sixth in the 400 (53.28) despite stumbling out of the gate, according to Meacham.

"My 4x400-meter relay team ran the fastest time since the relay team, anchored by to school-record holders, Devin Davenport (400-meters) and Cody Dixon (100 and 200 meters) set the 4x40 relay record at the CKC meet in 2008," Meacham said. "The team of Connor Duncan, Ethan Woodrow, Colt Litkenhus and Casey Moninger ran a 3:48. We still have a long way to go but this is a team with one frosh, one sophomore and two juniors.

"I think they can knock off a lot of time by regions and might run themselves into a state-qualifying time," Meacham said.

Buser, Sims among state, nation's best

Meacham noted that he has researched where Buser and Sims stand in the state and national rankings. "Elle Buser now owns the top seventh-grade 800-meter and second-fastest 1600-meter time in the state of Kentucky. She is the 22nd-fastest time in both races in all of the U.S."

Meacham added that Sims has the best eighth-grade time in the 100-meter hurdles and the top long jump distance in Kentucky. She is second in the triple jump. "Nationally, she ranks ninth in the 100-meter hurdles, third in the long jump and fifth in the triple jump. Wow!

"Good things are yet to come from my girls."

grade catcher Bailey Curry went 4-for-4 with a double, drew a walk and had two RBI. "She has just become a great hitter," Glass said. "We forget she is still only 13, but she now has an understanding of pitch counts and situational hitting."

Freshman Courtney-Gale Hawkins smacked a pair of hits while classmate Trista Craigmyle, who entered the game when starting center-fielder Molly Burkhead experienced some lower back problems, belted a double and scored three runs.

And pitchers Ally Moore and Mia Aldridge overcame a night when they did not have their best stuff but survived two major threats, getting Collins to strand five base-runners in the second and third innings.

Moore, who started and recorded the win, got in trouble in the second when she gave up five singles and three runs before Glass brought Aldridge on with two out.

"Ally struggled tonight with getting the ball up and over the plate," Glass said. "Mia came in and did a great job getting us out of the inning."

Aldridge struck out Sydney Cloyd to end the threat but an inning later, Collins loaded the sacks with one out before Bailey Rankin was forced at home.

Aldridge then fanned Lindsay Ketcham to end another threat.

SOFTBALL ROUNDUP

Lady Bearcats showcase big wins

From staff reports

Marissa Walker slapped four hits and Anna-Marie Hyatt belted her first home run as Anderson County pounded No. 23 Woodford County, 15-5, last Wednesday night at Anderson. Courtney-Gale Hawkins added three hits. An eight-run second inning, followed by five more runs in the third, powered the Lady Bearcats to the win.

Capital City Showcase

The Lady Bearcats advanced all the way to the championship game of the Capital City Showcase, hosted by Franklin County High School on Friday and Saturday. The Lady Bearcats picked up five big wins before losing to Roncalli Catholic, from Indianapolis, in the final.

Anderson now stands at 13-2 on the year and had not lost to a Kentucky team going into Monday's game at Collins.

Anderson Co. 12, Western Hills 0

Molly Burkhead stroked four hits as Anderson County routed Western Hills, 12-0, in the opening round of the Capital City Showcase. Hawkins continued her blistering pace at the plate, driving in five runs.

Anderson Co. 15, Boone Co. 1

Anderson County jumped to an 11-0 lead after three innings as the Lady Bearcats pounded Boone County, 15-1, on Saturday, Anna-Marie Hyatt led the onslaught with four hits and six RBI for the Lady Bearcats.

Anderson Co. 10, Christian Academy of Louisville 4

Anderson erupted for seven runs in the bottom of the fifth to defeat

Collins, which fell to 9-12 and 0-1 in district play, plated a run in the sixth, but by that time, Anderson had firmly regained control. Moore had re-entered the game in the top of the fourth.

Anderson had dictated how things would go from the outset when Burkhead and Anna-Marie Hyatt walked. Curry's single drove Burkhead home and Hyatt scored on an error.

Hawkins doubled home Craigmyle, courtesy running for Curry, then scored herself on Madison Brummett's sacrifice fly. Burkhead, batting for a second time in the opening frame, singled home Marissa Walker, who had drawn a base on balls. It was all the offense Anderson would need.

Anderson will host second-ranked Scott County Thursday night. "We can't play like we did tonight and expect to be in the game with Scott County," Glass said. "We are going to have to concentrate on the mental part of the game."

The Lady Bearcats will play in the Madison Central tournament over the weekend and go to Louisville Male on Tuesday. A game with East Jessamine, originally set for Monday, has been canceled.

Glass said Burkhead's back problems do not appear to be serious. Burkhead, who was hitting .549 coming in, had a hit and a walk in her only plate appearances Monday. Glass explained, "We were resting her. Any time we can, I try to rest her."

Christian Academy of Louisville in the Capital City Showcase. Madison Brummett collected three RBI while Alissa Vest and Corrin Robinson both had two. Vest, Robinson and Hyatt all tripled.

Anderson Co. 4, Louisville Butler 3

The Lady Bearcats pulled off a dramatic 4-3 win in the Showcase semi-finals. Hyatt ripped a two-out single to right that scored Brummett with the walk-off hit in the bottom of the sixth.

The game had been played under expiration of time rules.

After Butler had tied things at 3-all in the top of the inning, Vest led off with a walk, but was forced out on a Brummett's fielder's choice. Corrin Robinson reached on a bunt, moving Brummett to second, but Molly Burkhead, Anderson's leading hitter with a .549 average, popped out to first, setting the stage for Hyatt's game-winner.

Roncalli (Indiana) 9, Anderson Co. 1

Roncalli, a large parochial school from Indianapolis, rolled to a 9-1 win over the Lady Bearcats in the championship game. Roncalli reached Ally Moore for three runs in the bottom of the first and never looked back. Senior Megan Prather smacked three doubles and a triple for the Rebels.

Roncalli has long been a softball power in Indiana, winning three state championships since 1998 and was ranked No. 2 in Indiana's Class 4A (largest school class) last week, according to the Indiana High School Athletic Association website.

Roncalli, which competes in the same classification as New Albany and Floyd Central from the Louisville area, reached the Indiana semi-state finals last year.

Bearcats look to move on after Spencer rolls

Barnes wants history to repeat

By John Herndon
Sports Editor

TAYLORSVILLE - About all Anderson County could do was tip their hats to Spencer County and move on last Friday.

The Bears took advantage of seven Anderson walks, another hit batter and two Anderson errors to post an 11-1 five-inning win in a game rescheduled from a day earlier because of rain.

Spencer collected only seven hits - just one of those for extra bases, but waited out Anderson starter Brandon Eliadis for seven walks to notch its first win over the Bearcats since 2009.

"That's just baseball for you," Anderson coach L.W. Barnes said of the whipping.

The Bears struck for three runs in the first inning and five more in the second, when they sent 11 batters to the plate and left the bases loaded.

By that time, about the only question that remained was if Spencer would be able to claim a "mercy-rule" win. The Bears did when short-stop Austin Heilman turned on reliever Zack Mason's offering in the bottom of the fifth for a walk-off three-run homer.

Eliadis had been Anderson's most consistent starter, coming in with a 2-1 record. The loss had been to Dunbar when the Bearcats were no-hit. Friday, however, the junior left-hander struggled with what appeared to be an ever-shrinking strike zone.

The call on two pitches to Spencer lead-off hitter Chase Barnes, who walked, drew the ire of Anderson pitching coach Chris Copenhaver.

Eliadis eventually walked six in the first two innings - two coming with the bases loaded.

The junior settled down to pitch well in the third and fourth innings but by that time, the damage had been done.

"I thought (Eliadis) threw some good pitches," Barnes said. "I think both teams got squeezed a little at the plate. Regardless, their pitcher came out and did what he had to do."

After Chase Barnes

and Nathan Connard walked, Heilman reached on a fielder's choice when Eliadis fielded a slow tapper but no one was covering first, the only play the pitcher had. On the very next pitch, Spencer pitcher and cleanup hitter Lance Shelton ripped a two-run single to left field. Heilman would later score on a ground out.

The Bears also took advantage of a crucial second-inning error when Anderson botched a force play at second that could have been the second out of an easy inning. Instead, Spencer went for the jugular with a five-spot powered by back-to-back run-scoring singles from Heilman and Shel-

Anderson showed some life in the third when first baseman Max Crabtree, hitting eighth, turned a Shelton pitch into a towering home run over the right field fence. The next two batters, Connor Cotton and Shae Sparrow, both reached on walks, but the Bearcats squandered the opportunity.

"Max hit the ball well," Barnes said. "It was one of the few bright spots for us tonight."

Shelton kept Anderson batters off balance most of the evening, giving up just three hits, two of the infield variety. The senior right-hander struck out eight and walked four.

"Tonight we didn't do a very good job at the plate. We chased a lot of bad pitches," Barnes said.

Anderson, which has won the last two 30th District titles, will need to regroup. It is possible, according to the coach. Just three years ago, Barnes coached a Bearcat team that was struggling in April but finally went down in 11 innings in the regional championship game.

"The 2010 team got mercy-ruled by Shelby County in the first district seeding game," Barnes said, "but they came back and turned out to be a pretty good team."

Four Western Hills pitchers deflate Anderson

By John Herndon
Sports Editor

FRANKFORT - The walk from the right field corner back to the Anderson County dugout was slow and painful last Tuesday.

"They are a little deflated right now," Bearcat baseball coach L.W. Barnes said following the team meeting to discuss a 5-0 loss at Western Hills. "We had been playing really good baseball and then didn't get the job done today."

Cotton, Anderson's starting pitcher, gave up two earned runs - one of those might have been a bit of a fluke - and six hits over four innings.

"Cotton really threw the ball well," Barnes said. "He made a couple of mistakes but we just didn't get the hits for him."

Cotton and reliever Brice Stockton got little offensive support as the Bearcats managed just five hits and had more than one runner on base in just two frames.

The Bearcats threatened in the first when Granville Hayes drew a one-out walk but with two down, was thrown out at third trying to advance on Alex Payton's single to right.

The Bearcats managed only three hits against four Western Hills pitchers.

Anderson's only other threat came in the top of the sixth when Hayes singled and Stockton reached on an error to start the inning but, after moving to second and third on Payton's ground out, were left stranded. Western Hills ended the threat when second baseman Kyle Stevens tracked down Shae Sparrow's flare that had looked like a run-scoring hit.

By that time, it was already 3-0.

Anderson went without much of a whimper in the seventh to fall to 5-7 on the year.

Western Hills had nudged ahead in the third when nine-hitter Brandon Cummins singled, stole second then came home on Stevens' two-out single. The major damage came one inning later, however, when Tyler Anglin led off with what looked like a wind-blown home run and Zack Barker doubled, then came home to make it 3-0.

It was all the offense Western Hills would need and all came from the bottom half of the order. The Wolverines improved to 6-8 on the year.

Anglin's home run especially hurt as it looked like a routine fly ball off the bat, but when it got up in a very stiff wind that was blowing straight out, Anderson left fielder Dusty Puckett kept drifting back until he ran out of room.

Western Hills reached Stockton for two runs in the sixth when Thomas Bennett, Seth Roush and Stevens all reached on two-out hits. Stevens ended the day with two hits and two RBI, while Barker smacked three hits, including two doubles. Western Hills reached Anderson pitching for 10 hits.

HERNDON

in each corner.

Last fall, the Anderson football team opened the season without a decent scoreboard as a malfunctioning unit was not replaced in time.

They are all issues we have visited before.

To be fair, we should say that Anderson County has one of the better gym situations around as the high school has three - the main gym, the auxiliary facility that was added in 2006 and a third gym in the old Emma B. Ward school building that was converted to a freshman center. While some might whine about the gym set up, Anderson probably has one of the better arrangements for indoor sports made possible by that renovation that included classroom additions as well.

The Anderson softball team is also the primary beneficiary of an incredible indoor facility that is the envy of many other programs. But Anderson's actual playing field is pretty rough in the outfield.

Even though Anderson tennis had to stay on the road after a windstorm peeled the playing surface away a few years back, it now plays on a serviceable, but not spectacular, school court. It's better than some, not as good as others.

Yet there are still many problems. A lack of adequate practice facilities often sends the soccer and football teams to, ahem, the baseball and softball fields, which, of course, damages those fields.

But it's about the best anyone can do, given the circumstances. Still, it is a shame that things come to that.

As I have written several times over the years, the lack of a quality track and soccer fields is embarrassing.

Finding a solution in tough economic times is much easier said than done but somehow, some way, the Anderson County Board of Education needs to make sure kids have a chance to excel in all areas.

While academics obviously come first, it is also apparent that the ability to run faster, jump higher, shoot a basketball or catch a football is the ticket to college for many.

I am not one who believes in making funding demands when the money is not there.

But at the same time, I also believe if a school is offering a sport, it should do so in a first-class manner, including the playing field being used. Kids deserve nothing less.
